New Horizons

From 17 June

Tate Modern, the UK's foremost modern art gallery, is known as much for the building that houses it (the former Bankside Power Station, designed by British architect Giles Gilbert Scott and reimagined by Swiss architectural firm Herzog & de Meuron), as the art it exhibits. So the opening of a new ten-storey building behind the iconic original is a significant event. Built on top of Tate Modern's performance art space The Tanks, the new building, also designed by Herzog & de Meuron, will be dedicated to live art, film and installations.

New Balls, Please

27 June to 10 July

The oldest and most esteemed tournament in tennis, Wimbledon is a highlight not only of every British summer for both diehard tennis fans and dilettantes but also of the global sporting calendar. No matter how much success a player has, they will not be considered a true great unless they have won Wimbledon. Be warned, tickets are in great demand and queues are notoriously lengthy.

LONDON

PAINTING PEOPLE AND PLACES

Until 28 August

Having made his name as an abstract painter in London in the 1960s, Bill Jacklin later controversially eschewed abstraction in favour of figurative painting. He moved to New York in 1985 and ever since, his work has focused on the city. Bill Jacklin: Paintings and Monotypes, at Marlborough Fine Art in London (until 7 June) will feature the artist's latest work. Jacklin will also be exhibiting at the Royal Academy of Arts from 3 June to 28 August.

DINING ON THE THAMES

Throughout June

While London isn't lacking West End shows, there's something special about watching a musical performance (featuring show tunes and pop songs) while floating down the Thames. This month you can unwind with a four-course menu (served alongside sparkling wine and other beverages) as London's iconic sights drift by.
